

Why should I / my child participate?

TACTICS will invite children with ADHD, ASD, OCD and healthy children and their parents to participate in brain imaging studies. The children and their parents will also be invited to deliver their DNA (genetic material) and a blood sample. These studies have been designed to learn more about where and how the brain of children with these disorders is different from the brain of normal children. By using also information from studies in animals we attempt to discover new ways of treating these disorders. TACTICS also has planned small clinical study to explore whether new medications are effective.

Participating in these study will greatly contribute to deepen our understanding of what causes these disorders and to developing more effective treatments.
